THE ISLAND

The discovery of two male castaways on a remote tropical island causes consternation amongst the 'new-age' female inhabitants. What should they do? Kill them, or hold them as prisoners?

James Saunders' "male chauvinist comedy" is revived by this "individually marvellous", "uniformly convincing" all-female company.

Theatre de Simplicite, not to be confused with the international company Theatre de Complicite, hail from Cheltenham Ladies' College.

This year's offering "of hedonistic dramatic revelry" is a "male chauvinist comedy" performed by an all-female cast. It is performed with enthusiasm and wit, and though the play is a little wordy the girls do pull it off with innuendo, double entendre and a little homespun philosophy.

An all-female island is invaded by two shipwrecked sailors. The two sexes have never met before and, if you can buy that, the comedy has its moments. A pleasant lunchtime diversion.
